So a few years ago, I managed to meet a branch commander of the PFLP

This was in 2009, I was making my way from town to town, trying to get in touch with an actual member of the military/command wings of the PFLP. I went into a shop where I was given a phone number, and thus was the beginning of a friendship of sorts.

I recently got in touch with him again, and I learned that he has worked his way up in the grand chain of things, and I will hopefully be meeting with him and some other actual members this following week in Jifna.

For those unaware, the PFLP [Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine] is the resistance group I associate myself with, so this is definitely a cool thing.

If these plans all work out, I'll also be receiving PFLP headbands, balaclavas, and maybe, MAYBE, a military outfit just for the hell of it. Granted, this isn't all out combat gear, but rather fatigues. Monadel, the dude, was telling me about how he could get his hands on some if I wanted and my reaction was basically hell freaking yes I want.

So, yeah, that's something to look forward to.

There is something really empowering and just, good feeling, about actually conversing, meeting, and just being around these people who fight for the freedom of our people, while being labeled "terrorists" by the entire Western World.

Wow, if you're going to be thinking about it like that, then this basically means I'll be having lunch with "terrorists" lol

But really, they are not, they are awesome, and I'm slightly giddy at the thought of potentially taking pictures with the people that end up on international news.

Speaking of which, I still have my huge rant to post about my time in Jerusalem. Just thinking about it pisses me off just a biiiit too much, so I'll have to write that one up when I can stand to do so without wanting to kill someone.

So yes.
