

Stanford University mentioned in new study on academic boycotters and campus antisemitism

November 16, 2017

Dear President Tessier-Lavigne,

I wanted to share with you AMCHA Initiative's new report, "The Impact of Academic Boycotters of Israel on U.S. Campuses," which mentions Stanford University.

I know you are already familiar with the way in which academic boycotts violate the basic tenets of academic freedom if implemented, and I commend you for your outstanding statement denouncing the American Studies Association's resolution to impose an academic boycott on Israel while you were President of Rockefeller University:

"[A]cademic boycotts contradict a core principle of academic freedom by restricting free and open communication within the academic community."

I also commend Stanford's positioning on the issue shortly after the ASA resolution:

"Stanford University does not support an academic boycott of Israeli academic institutions. Stanford agrees with the position taken by the Association of American Universities on Dec. 20: 'Efforts to address political issues, or to address restrictions on academic freedom, should not themselves infringe upon academic freedom.'"

What you may not be aware of, however, and what we wanted to share, is new research that demonstrates the extent to which the on-campus implementation and advocacy of an academic boycott of Israel directly harm American students and faculty at U.S. universities. AMCHA's new study, which can be found here, investigates these harms.

Our results strongly suggest that at least some faculty who have signed petitions or statements in support of an academic boycott of Israel are bringing their anti-Israel sentiments and support for BDS to campus through their department's sponsorship of events with pro-BDS speakers. These events, in turn, significantly increase the likelihood of on-campus acts of anti-Jewish hostility such as assault, harassment, destruction of property and suppression of speech. Specifically, the study found that pro-BDS faculty were between five and twelve times more likely to sponsor events with BDS-supporting speakers, and schools that hosted these events were twice as likely to have acts of anti-Jewish hostility.

The report has been covered in several media outlets, including The Washington Free Beacon, The Jerusalem Post, Mosaic Magazine, Algemeiner, Jewish Press, Arutz Sheva, and Education Views, among others.

I would be happy to discuss the report in more detail at your convenience. Please feel free to contact me with any questions.

Sincerely,

Tammi Rossman-Benjamin

AMCHA Initiative, Director
www.AMCHAinitiative.org

To see the full report: <https://amchainitiative.org/wp-content/uploads/2017/10/Faculty-Report.pdf>

CC: Board of Trustees
Provost Persis Drell
Dean of Humanities and Sciences Richard P. Saller