

Letter to Education Secretary Betsy DeVos: 88 Organizations Urge Safeguards Against NRC Abuse of Federal Funds

SENT VIA EMAIL

December 4, 2019

Dear Secretary DeVos,

We are 88 education, civil rights and religious organizations, representing hundreds of thousands of members and supporters. Many of our organizations wrote to you last fall regarding our concern that some directors and affiliated faculty at federally-funded Middle East Studies programs who support an academic boycott of Israel have attempted and will continue to attempt to implement that boycott in ways that directly violate the legislative intent of Title VI HEOA. We are writing once again because we believe it is more critical than ever that your Department address this growing threat.

Recent incidents have demonstrated the willingness of faculty across the country to implement the academic boycott of Israel on their campuses. Last September, a University of Michigan professor who supports the academic boycott of Israel refused to write a letter of recommendation for a student wanting to study at Tel Aviv University. In November, the entire faculty body at Pitzer College voted to suspend the school's study abroad program at the University of Haifa, in compliance with the academic boycott of Israel. And in March of this year, New York University's Department of Social and Cultural Analysis passed a resolution of non-cooperation with the university's school in Israel.

It is of particular concern that more than half the directors of currently Title VI-funded Middle East Studies National Resource Centers (NRCs) have pledged support for an academic boycott of Israel or engaged in boycott-compliant behavior, including attempts to shut down their universities' study abroad programs in Israel, as have these centers' affiliated faculty. In fact, two events recently hosted by NRCs at the University of Michigan and New York University each defended the right of faculty to implement an academic boycott of Israel. Nor do these appear to be isolated occurrences. A study of more than 100 Middle East Studies programs across the country, including all 15 NRCs, found that departments with one or more faculty who support an academic boycott of Israel were 5 times more likely to sponsor events with boycott-supporting speakers than departments with no faculty boycotters, and departments with academic boycott-supporting chairs or directors were 3.5 times more likely to sponsor such events.

As you know, Title VI authorizes the Department of Education to provide grants to area studies programs at institutions of higher education for the following purposes:

- To produce increased numbers of trained personnel and research in foreign languages, area studies, and other international studies;
- To develop a pool of international experts to meet national needs;
- To develop and validate specialized materials and techniques for foreign language acquisition and fluency, emphasizing (but not limited to) the less commonly taught languages;
- To promote access to research and training overseas, including through linkages with overseas institutions;
- To advance the internationalization of a variety of disciplines throughout undergraduate and graduate education.

In stark contrast, an academic boycott calls for cutting off linkages with educational institutions in the boycotted country and unavoidably impairs the ability of students to travel to or study about the country or its language, and the ability of faculty to write, teach, and pursue scholarly research in this region of the world. In particular, the academic boycott of Israel urges faculty to work towards shutting down study abroad programs in Israel and refusing to write letters of recommendation for students who want to study there; sabotaging colleague's research collaborations with Israeli institutions and scholars; and blocking or canceling campus events and educational activities that "promote the normalization of Israel in the global academy."

While acknowledging that a faculty member's right to express support for an academic boycott of Israel is protected by academic freedom, were the director or affiliated faculty of an NRC to implement an academic boycott of Israel or any other country within their center's purview, it would explicitly contravene the purposes of Title VI and the will of Congress. It is unacceptable that federal funds could be used to implement an academic boycott that directly contravenes the purposes for which these funds have been granted. Area studies programs whose directors or affiliated faculty engage in such behavior should be ineligible to receive or renew Title VI funding.

To address the threat posed by this loophole in federal law, Congressman Glenn Grothman recently introduced an amendment to HEOA to ensure Title VI funds are used only for their intended pedagogical purposes, not faculty members' personal politics. His amendment provided a clear and easy fix to a large and looming problem.

Unfortunately, in this climate of increased partisanship, his sensible solution failed along party lines. In light of your September ruling that it is unlawful for institutions of higher education to use Title VI funds for purposes not intended by the law, we ask that you take executive action now to ensure this ruling is followed. Your immediate action is critical until Congress can permanently fix this problem.

We therefore once again urge the Department of Education to:

- Issue a statement warning NRC directors and affiliated faculty that implementing an academic boycott of one of the countries in the NRC's purview would be a direct subversion of the stated purpose of Title VI funding.
- Require area studies program directors applying for or renewing NRC or FLAS funding to sign a statement affirming that neither they nor any of their program's affiliated faculty will, as part of their academic responsibilities, implement an academic boycott of any of the countries within the purview of their program in such a way as to restrict or limit the academic opportunities of their students or colleagues.

Sincerely,
